

Early Modern Studies as a Key to Understanding the Religious Situation in Europe Today [TUA Webinar for RESILIENCE March 17, 2021, 18.00-19.00 CET]

TOPIC

The period 1450-1650 demonstrates intellectual, cultural, political and societal changes that mainly resulted from religious changes and that have become decisive for Europe's situation today. The split in the Christian church - initiated by Martin Luther - into a catholic and a protestant camp caused a southern Europe mainly characterized by Catholicism and a northern Europe largely dominated by Protestantism. The fact that in the Early Modern period Catholic and Protestant rulers joined forces against the spread of the Ottoman Empire, is one of the causes of a more multireligious situation in south-eastern Europe. These facts underline the need for interdisciplinary research on the Early Modern era.

PRESENTER

Herman J. Selderhuis, dean of the Theological University of Apeldoorn

WHY

The webinar will inform on the state of research, on lacunae and desiderata and aims and providing insight into how RESILIENCE can contribute to this research. At the same time the webinar aims at collecting feedback from users: what are their needs in this respect?

FOR WHOM

The webinar will be of interest for a wide audience, including junior and senior researchers in humanities, librarians, publishers, and employees of NGO's, etc.

HOW

Online Participation.

Participation is as follows: you send an email to registration@tua.nl. You will then receive a Zoom link in a timely manner that will allow you to participate in the webinar.

The working language will be English.

DURATION

1 hour.